OPEN DIPLOMACY ADVOCATES WIN SIGNAL VICTORY

Latin-American Statesmen
Find U. S. Willing To

COOLIDGE RETURNING

Will Make Stop at Jackson-

By George R. Holmes
I. N. S. Staff Correspondent
HAVANA, Jan. 18.—The American delegation to the Sixth Pan-American Conference is leaving no stone unturned to convince the suspicious countries of South and Central America that the cards are on the table—face up.

The Latin-American statesmen who came to Havana anticipating trouble have been to a large extent disarmed by the bland manner in which the United States delegation headed by Charles Evans Hughes, has fallen in with every suggestion, even including that of open sessions of the conference committees. That concession on the part of the North American delegates smacked of "open covenants openly arrived at"—a distinctive departure from the usual rules governing Pan-American congresses.

Theoretically, the advocates of "open diplomacy" have won a signal victory. Actually, there was considerable doubt today as to just how open this diplomacy is to be. It is true that committee hearings will be open to the public, via the press, but it requires but the request of one member of one committee to transfer the session into an executive one behind closed doors. That fact accounts for some of the alacrity with which Mr. Hughes accepted the Argentine proposition of open committee meetings.

It is anticipated that one of the questions which Mr. Hughes will want to have discussed in executive session is that dealing with the present situation of the United States in Nicaragua.

American military occupation of Nicaragua as such, is not a subject for conference discussion. There is, however, on the agenda the question of codifying international law with interpretations of "intervention" that are of vital importance to Washington's diplomacy in Central America.

The American answer to the Nicaraguan issue has already been decided upon. It will consist of the statement that there is no Nicaraguan question, inasmuch as the Nicaraguan government itself as well as both major political parties requested the presence of American marines.

The definition of what constitutes "intervention" however, presents another problem. Mexico, Salvador, Haiti and other countries that have felt the tread of United States marines, want to define it pretty rigorously. They want to write into the international law that governs the Western Hemisphere the definition that the mere landing of armed forces constitutes intervention, irrespective of whether such armed forces were or were not invited.

The American answer to this proposition is not yet clear. Mr. Hughes said today that this bridge would be crossed when it was reached.

Meanwhile, the conference has got away to a running start. President Coolidge's visit to Havana and the warmth of his welcome in this Latin-American capital did much to speed the ground of international harmony.

The chiefs of delegations from the 21 countries had a harmonious meeting yesterday and arranged for the future conduct of the conference. To-day there will be a meeting of the entire conference to ratify the decisions of the chiefs. The principal work of the delegation heads was to appoint eight committees to handle the numerous subjects on the program.

Mr. Hughes assigned himself to the committee on "public international law" which will have to deal with the report of the International Commission of Jurists. It is this report that will inject, by inference, the Nicaraguan situation into the conference.

Sessions of the congress are being held in the University of Havana, a magnificent collection of buildings far removed from the gaiety of the city proper.

ABOARD THE PRESIDENTIAL SPECIAL, Jan. 18 (I.N.S.)—Northward bound on the second stage of his return from the Pan-American Congress at Havana, President Coolidge early today was approaching Jacksonville, where he will pause to receive a demonstration in his honor.

Jacksonville vied with Miami for the chance to play host to the Presidential party. To satisfy the demands of both places, President Coolidge stopped off at Miami on his way to Havana and he will leave the special train this morning for an auto tour of Jacksonville.

President Coolidge will give Jacksonville an hour of his time. With Mrs. Coolidge and Secretaries Kellogg and Wilbur he will motor to the principal scenic attractions and will return to his train without any speech-making or handshaking. He is due in Washington tomorrow.

REAL OBJECTS OF A SERVICE CLUB GIVEN

A Rotarian and A Kiwanian
Address Doylestown
Men

TWO 100% MEETINGS

DOYLESTOWN, Jan. 18.—Kiwanis observed a "clearing house" program Monday night at the weekly dinner meeting at Brunner's Restaurant when the subject for discussion was "What Should Be Expected of the Service Clubs of Doylestown." The speakers for the occasion were Vice-President George S. Hotchkiss, of the Rotary Club, and Past President Samuel B. Stilwell, of the Kiwanis Club.

Contrary to the belief of a number of people in the community after the organization of service clubs, both speakers again made known that the object of a service club is not that of a backer of all projects in dollars and cents but one of public service.

"Our program of work should be based on the idea of public service," declared Rotarian Hotchkiss. "Our service clubs in Doylestown as in other places, were started with the idea of putting across a piece of work by a group of men representing a cross-section of the business and professional make-up of the community.

"Fellowship, I feel, is the foundation stone of any service club. The fact that in a service club you have an excellent opportunity to learn to know the other fellow better than you ever knew him before, is worth a lot. The primary purpose of the service club, as I see it, is to spread good will and to concentrate our ideas along the line of public welfare.

"The trouble has been that some people have been prone to put a dollar mark ahead of everything else in the service club. Some, who know not the real purpose of a service club, seem to think that money will be raised for every project in the community, by the club. If service clubs were organized only to raise money, and that as their purpose, the idea of a service club would fall flat. Back of the idea of a service club is the same idea that world peace advocates are seeking. It is necessary to get the right heart interest in back of your membership in a service club. I believe that we should not duplicate any effort that is well organized at the present time by another organization."

Rotarian Hotchkiss complimented the Kiwanis Club on the strides made last year in Doylestown and particularly did he voice his approval of the platform of the club as announced this year; that of public service and the underprivileged children and the determination to get away from the service club being an organization in which dollars and cents is the most important factor. The speaker said that in his opinion the program of a service club in Doylestown should be of an educational and inspirational nature with some definite purpose in view.

Kiwanian "Sam" Stilwell said that the operation of Kiwanis as he saw it was divided two ways, into subjective and objective work.

"The community for instance," Kiwanian Stilwell said, "has no right to expect any particular objective activity, but it has a right to expect subjective activity. In other words people of the community have a right to expect that members of service clubs in a community will conduct their business and professional work in a manner that will make a better community. The community has a right to expect that service club members will be good citizens. The community has no right to expect service club members to get out the vote but it has the right to expect every service club member to vote himself.

"What the community can expect of us as service clubs is that which is expected of every service club member worthy of membership in such an organization."

Two 100% Meetings

Past President "Bill" Fretz, who presided Monday night in the absence of President Hiram H. Keller, who with Kiwanians Carmon Ross and C. L. CHILDREN SKATING ON HIGHWAYS, DANGEROUS

Practice Is Increasing Here
And Lives Are Greatly
Endangered

SHOULD STOP AT ONCE

Motorists are being confronted with a serious menace in children roller skating on the concrete highways here. It is a danger of which the children, apparently, are not aware and one to which the parents should at once call attention.

Numerous motorists have called the fact to the attention of the Courier and requested that publicity be given as a means of stopping the children endangering their own lives as well as causing serious accidents to others.

Not only is the practice of roller skating on the highways practiced at night but during the daytime, as well. It is exceedingly dangerous at night due to the fact that the youngsters skate along the side of the highway in the shadows of the lights and cannot be easily seen.

Many motorists report that they have narrowly averted running-down children and it is feared a serious accident is likely to occur, unless the practice ceases.

BURLINGTON AGAIN FAILS IN COUNCIL

Ten Ballots Not Enough To Break the Existing Deadlock

ACTION IN COURT

BURLINGTON, N. J., Jan. 18.—Another attempt was made last night by the two factions of the Burlington Common Council to elect a president, but the vote remained six to six and adjournment was taken until Friday night when balloting will be resumed. Ten ballots have been taken since the first of the year in an effort to break the deadlock.

Legal action has been brought against Councilman William F. Young, a supporter of Acting Mayor Harold V. Holmes, to show cause why he should continue to hold his seat in Council. It is contended that Young was elected a city alderman last November and cannot continue to serve as a Councilman. A hearing on the matter was held yesterday before Supreme Court Justice Frank T. Lloyd. It was continued until this morning.

George Silpath, a citizen of Burlington, yesterday appeared before Justice of the Peace J. Leedom Smith and had a notice served on James Fenton, a Councilman from the Fourth Ward, to the effect that he was holding the office illegally. It is claimed that Fenton is filling the vacancy of Charles Simons.

At the session last night Councilman Park McConnell made a motion that Council go into executive session in an attempt to agree upon a plan of reorganization, but this motion was lost.

Councilman Holmes asked that the City Clerk read the notice issued by Justice Smith referring to Fenton holding the office illegally, but this proposition was voted down.

In the meantime petitions are being circulated asking for a city manager form of government. It is said that these petitions are being signed by representative citizens of Burlington.

JURY GIVES VERDICT IN DAMAGE SUIT FOR AUTO ACCIDENT

Mrs. Virginia E. Harkins, of Holland, Gets $1,335.31
Instead of $30,000

BUS CO. WINS ITS CLAIM

Waer Bus Co., Inc., Is Given
The Full Amount of Its Claim

DOYLESTOWN, Jan. 18.—In a damage suit in which $30,000 was asked of William E. DeGroot, Bristol automobile dealer, a jury in civil court here yesterday returned a verdict in the sum of $1,335.31 for Mrs. Virginia E. Harkins and her husband, Charles E. Harkins, both of Holland, Bucks county.

The jury awarded Mrs. Harkins a verdict of $800 and her husband received $535.31. The woman sued for $20,000 and the man for $10,000. Mrs. Harkins asked damages for injuries sustained by her when the automobile in which she was riding, and another car driven by the defendant, collided at the intersection of the Bridgeton and Newtown roads on May 14, 1927. In the trial of the case Mrs. Harkins' physician testified that the woman in his opinion, was permanently injured in the accident. The defense produced witnesses and testimony to show that Mrs. Harkins was to blame for the accident. In the trial of the case the plaintiffs were represented by Henry A. James, Doylestown, and the defendant by Howard L. James, Bristol.

In Court No. 1 before Judge William C. Ryan yesterday a verdict in the sum of $2,809.25, the full amount of the claim, was awarded to the Waer Bus Company, Inc., of Easton and Newark, N. J., in a suit against Sol Glassman and Morris Polin, both of Philadelphia. Mr. Polin is a well known hosiery manufacturer living in Germantown and operating factories in Philadelphia and Stroudsburg.

The bus company, operating a passenger line between Phillipsburg, N. J. and Philadelphia, claimed damages in the suit because of damage caused to one of the passenger buses on the Doylestown and Easton highway on the morning of Sept. 8, 1926, when an automobile driven by Glassman and owned by Polin, collided with the bus near Ottsville. The bus, witnesses for the plaintiff company testified in the trial, was badly damaged. The witnesses for the plaintiff testified that the defendant's car approached the bus at a reckless rate of speed and crashed into it. In the accident, Polin and Glassman were injured and taken to the Emergency Hospital, Doylestown.

In the verdict for $2,809.25, the jury noted on the return slip that Glassman, the driver of the car, was guilty of negligence. In the trial of the case the bus company was represented by Samuel B. Stilwell, Doylestown, while the defendants were represented by Calvin S. Boyer and Isaac J. Vanartsdalen, Doylestown.

A jury in Court No. 1 yesterday returned a verdict for $318.57 for the plaintiff in a suit brought by the Gulf Refining Company, against James A. Grant and William Driver, Morrisville garage proprietors. The suit grew out of a dispute over the sale of 2,940 gallons of gasoline. There arose a dispute as to whether the defendants were to pay 15 cents a gallon for the gasoline, as the defendants contended was the price, or 18 cents a gallon, as the plaintiff company contended. A set-off claim advanced by the defendants was thrown out, the court ruling there was not sufficient evidence to sustain it. The jury found that the gasoline price in the case is 18 cents instead of 13 cents a gallon. In the trial the plaintiff company was represented by Calvin S. Boyer and Isaac J. Vanartsdalen, Doylestown, and the defendants by Samuel B. Stilwell, Doylestown.

In a suit brought by John Simko, of Neshaminy, against John Maczerniuk, for $200, the court yesterday afternoon before adjournment, directed the jury to render a verdict for the defendant.

COLLEGE AND DEMOCRACY

Singularly little attention has been paid to the important role which the institutions of higher education have played in creating the distinctive civilization known as American. Much is being said today, and much of it true, of the over-emphasis or mistaken emphasis placed upon college education. Incredible swarms of boys and girls but little fitted for such training are demanding and securing it. Not a few observers question the advantages of such wholesale application of higher learning to the masses.

But whatever the defects of the system, it is of the very warp and woof of democracy. The people demand the universities and desire and expect much from them. The people feel that the university, especially the public or state institution, exists for their service and the training of their children; that it is theirs, their very own.

Secretary Hoover places first among the causes of American prosperity the "fine initiative and intelligence of our people in the use of our resources." Surely that initiative and intelligence have been indissolubly linked with the democracy and opportunity which the country's educational institutions have afforded.

Every thoughtful and democratic American repudiates the idea that the children of laboring men should be differently educated from other people's children. There is no reason why a child in this free country should inherit the occupation of its father. The manner and subjects of a child's education should be determined by its aptitudes, and not by the occupation or social position of the parents.

Democracy and the university were made for each other. Both are training schools of self-reliance and responsibility. The world will never be saved by the device of staying out of it. Free government with all its life demands the university. If they have done nothing else, colleges and universities have prevented the caste system from developing in this country.

The main trouble, with any younger generation is that it wants to take three bases on a bunt.

"How will women look in 1950?" asks a magazine. Oh, about three or four years older!

Professional reformers think it is their business to keep humanity from reverting to type.

Many fail to recognize opportunity because they are under the belief that it is only a knocker.

Some automobile manufacturers are planning to sell twice as many cars this year as ever before. Gracious! How are we ever going to get across the road?

The attitude in some quarters is simply this: That a person is either too strong to have to take cold baths in January or too weak to run the risk.

"The art of receiving gifts" is said to be taught in a girls' school in Paris, but the course certainly is not predicated on the theory that they ever fail to take them.

President Nicholas Murray Butler, of Columbia University, says headline writers annoy him by their use of words, which suggests that some one of them wrote it "Nick Butler."

SYNOPSIS
Myra Martin, secretary to Leonard Gilbert, a prominent divorce lawyer, is engaged to her employer. One morning her younger sister, Helene, whom she has cared for since the death of their mother, comes to Myra's office and there meets Huntley Sheldon, a notorious man about town whose temperamental wife is attempting to divorce him for the fourth time. Myra warns her sister against Sheldon, but Helene, although interested in Ralph Naylor, is fascinated by the man. Sheldon, becoming interested, phones Helene inviting her to tea and telling her that he has a "surprise" for her.

But somehow when she talked to Sheldon it seemed to turn everything upside down. And it didn't matter what Myra had said, or would say. There was something compelling about him, something that made you feel a little sorry; that made you want to do things for him. Besides, he did have such an air about him; he knew all the waiters everywhere, and they always bowed very low and said: "How do you do, Mr. Sheldon. A table by the window—for two. Yes, sir. Thank you, sir." Why did everyone have to talk about him the way they did. It seemed unkind, and not a little unfair, Helene shook her head, slowly. She couldn't figure it out. So she poured out her coffee and sat sipping it, thinking of Sheldon's words and trying to imagine what his surprise could possibly be. Probably something really nice, she thought, coming from Sheldon. Helene was quite used to having people do things for her, and make surprises for her. Somehow she appealed that way to people. But to have Huntley Sheldon do things for her! And he had known her many really beautiful women—women with lovely clothes, and charm, and sophistication. It didn't seem quite possible.

"Of course I wanted to see you."

She finally gave the whole problem up in despair. She didn't care for analyzing situations, anyhow. She left all that to Myra. So she tried to busy herself, dressing by degrees, dusting the living room furniture, answering the telephone, and waiting for four o'clock to come.

The Plaza was stirring busily with the activities of approaching tea time. Soft music floated out and over Peacock Alley. Beautifully dressed women swung lazily along over thickly piled rugs of deep, rich hues; met smartly tailored men, and stood in little groups laughing low, talking, gesticulating. Thin streamers of cigarette smoke rose and diffused themselves and became lost against the gold leaf ceiling.

Into the midst of the chatter and the moving color came Helene. Several people turned to look at the red gold hair, and comment on it. But Helene was quite used to this attention, and it left no impression. What she did notice, however, was the tall figure of Huntley Sheldon coming towards her, his walking stick swinging airily. She could feel the blood rushing to her face, making her hot and faint, and then running away again, leaving her cold and her hands icy. And then his voice, when he spoke to her, and took her arm, leading her towards the cosy tea room where the obsequious waiter bowed them to a dimly lighted table.

Many people turned to look at the two, and some bowed to Sheldon. At one table the men of the party glanced at each other, and one said: "Who's the girl with Sheldon?"

"I don't know," the other shook his head. "Darned pretty kid," the first started at Helene's eyes. "Robbing the cradle, I'd call it," laughed the other. And then they both turned away, lost in new interests and new arrivals.

"Please tell me, what's the surprise?" Helene was demanding as soon as they had given their order. "I could hardly wait to meet you to hear about it."

"You certainly don't flatter me," Sheldon laughed. "Was that the only reason you were anxious to come?"
"O, I didn't mean that. Of course, I wanted to see you. But I just have a terrible, insatiable curiosity that must be satisfied."
"How unusual—for a woman," he mocked.
"O, I'm not curious like that. I'm not curious about other people—just about things that concern me. And now, what is the surprise? I shall perish and pass out if you don't tell me within the next two minutes."

"Good gracious, I can't have anything like that happening. Think of the scandal. Pretty Girl Dies On Aged Millionaire's Hands. Can't you see the newspaper headlines?" Sheldon chuckled.

"But you haven't told me the surprise yet," Helene insisted, "and besides, you're not aged."
"Thank you, my dear, thank you. But when I arose this morning and gazed upon this handsome countenance in the mirror I said, 'Huntley, old boy, that's just what I said, I said: 'Huntley, old boy, you're old enough to know lots better,' and when you come to the point where you begin to talk to yourself about such things you are getting on."

"Now you're being funny. And that isn't telling me about the surprise at all."

"Well, you see it's this way," Sheldon began, still smiling. "I'm hesitating about telling you, because, after all, it really isn't much. Sometimes, in the evening I get good ideas. That's why I phoned you last night. And I woke up this morning with the same idea in my mind, and when an idea sticks that long, it's pretty sure to be a good 'un. So, with this sudden flash of inspiration starting me in the face, I called you and told you I had a surprise. But now that I consider it from all its angles, I'm beginning to think that perhaps you mightn't consider it to be so very much."

"Yes, but what is it?" Helene waited breathlessly.

"Just this. I want to give you a party."

"O, Huntley, I think that's dear of you," Helene's eyes sparkled. Then a shadow fell over her face. "But—but what about your—your wife?"

"Now listen, darling child, I've told you that you mustn't listen to a lot of this silly gossip that goes the rounds. I've given parties all my life, and there's no reason why I shouldn't give you one. Just a nice, quiet, intimate sort of party, with a few people."

"I know, but I—I don't think Myra would approve of the idea. You know she gave me a long lecture about you last night. She recognized your voice when you called."

"Damn it! I'm always doing something messy. I thought that was probably your sister who answered the phone, and I didn't leave my name for that reason."

"I know, but you know she talks to you on the phone at the office, and Myra's very clever about voices. She always recognizes them."

"I'm terribly sorry, Helene," Sheldon patted the girl's hand very tenderly. "My bright ideas are always doing something like that. I was just so full of the inspiration that I had to tell you right away. I hope you didn't get too badly brow-beaten."

"O, you don't know Myra like I do," Helene hurried to her sister's defense. "She wouldn't brow beat me, at all. She just talks things over, and discusses them."

"What did she say about me?" "Huntley," Helene explained. "She just said that someone had told her that we had been here together on Monday. She wouldn't say who brought the glad news, but it was someone who comes into her office. I think, anyhow, she said that the fact that someone told her about it was proof that people do a lot of talking, and especially about a person who is as well known as you are. Then she went into a long discussion about various types of married men."

"Put I'm sure she can't understand my situation. She's never been married, has she?"

"No."
"Well, that's a part of the proof. No one can ever imagine what it means to try to live in the same house with someone who wants to control everything, and have everything their own way. You know I give Nita everything she wants—I do everything I possibly can for her, but she's terribly jealous and very suspicious. She suspects even my most innocent friendships. But now that she's decided to divorce me, I'm sure she won't be interested in what I do any longer. I like Nita—she's a most charming woman. I admire her. But I can't get along with her."

THE LIQUOR HABIT

Francis Gulick Jewett in "The Next Generation" says that Dr. Alexander Lamber, while in Bellevue Hospital, queried 250 persons as to the age at which they began the liquor habit. Results showed that 69 per cent of those who had the alcohol habit began to acquire it before they were 21 years old, although at the time the country was under license and selling liquor to minors was strictly prohibited. The following table tells the story:

Before the age of 6	4
Between 6 and 12	13
Between 12 and 16	60
Between 16 and 21	102
Between 21 and 30	71
After the age of 30	8

The Success Habit

In any line of work is the natural result of continued intelligent effort. Failure is the natural result of untalented effort. The former leads to an interesting prosperous life. The latter leads to an uninteresting life of drudgery.

You make your own habits. For fifty years, while preparing students for college, we have aimed to develop in them the habit of right thinking—to think and act intelligently. Their success proves that, in general, we have succeeded. We can help you. Begin now.
